The minor will offer undergraduate students a unique opportunity to study public policy impacting women and to situate feminist perspectives for creating and implementing public policies aimed at improving their lives. A core aspect of the minor will be to illustrate to students that the gender category of "women" is intersectional with race-ethnicity, class, sexuality, dis/ability, and geographic location. Ohio State is able to offer this minor by merging existing resources of the John Glenn College of Public Affairs with curriculum in WGSS that focuses on policy, governance, women's diverse identities, social justice initiatives, and social movements. This minor grows out of previous collaborations of WGSS and the John Glenn College such as the New Leadership Program and the current use by the Glenn College and its students of the WGSS minor as a specialization area.
